Toxins are making headlines

Troubled waters? The future of drinking water in the U.S.

From fluoride to “forever chemicals,” drinking water has been in the spotlight this year. In a Q&A, Yale epidemiologist Nicole Deziel discusses the water we drink today — and what’s on tap for the future.

It’s literally raining “forever chemicals” in Miami

By Angela Nicoletti

November 4, 2024 at 10:00am

PFAS are in Miami’s rainwater. And it is the latest evidence the synthetic “forever chemicals” — that have raised health concerns for people and wildlife — hitch a ride on the water cycle, using the complex system to circulate over greater distances.

For more than a year, FIU researchers collected and analyzed 42 rainwater samples across three different sites in Miami-Dade County. A total of 21 perfluoroalkyl and polyfluoroalkyl substances, or PFAS, were detected, including PFOS and PFOA (since phased out of production over cancer concerns), as well as the newer varieties used in manufacturing today.

It's WORSE Than You Think

- Average American has 212 toxic chemicals in their blood.
- Over 200 toxins found in the cord blood of babies.
- Toxic “forever” chemicals (PFAS) found in the blood of 97% of Americans.
- Research shows 2,000 water systems have high levels of lead.
- Recent tests on baby food show 95% of samples had toxic heavy metals.

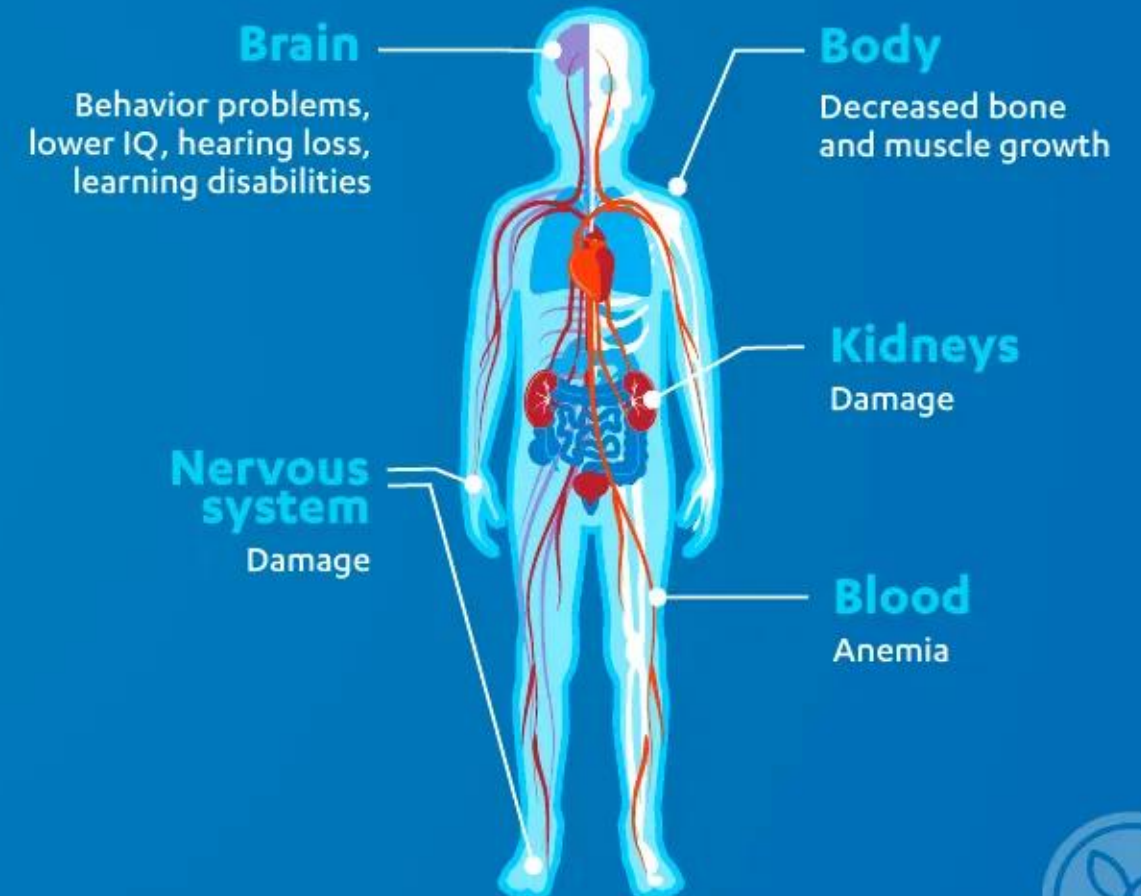

Symptoms of Toxicity

ADULTS

CHILDREN

How Toxin Exposure Shows Up in Kids

1. Excessive Fatigue

Lead and arsenic are linked to anemia, causing tiredness. This may look like a child who is tired or groggy, despite naps.

2. Developmental Delays

Mercury, a neurotoxin, was shown to slow fine motor skills in school-aged children. This may look like struggling to use basic objects.

3. Behavioral Issues

Irritability in young children may be linked to lead. Look out for persistently grouchy, short-tempered, or nervous behavior.

4. Frequent Illness

Experiencing chronic sniffles and bugs may be linked to cadmium exposure, which is shown to impact the immune system.

5. Difficulty Focusing

A build-up of lead is linked to brain fog and cognitive impairment. This can show up as kids unable to stay on task.

6. Extreme Moodiness

Mercury can cause mood swings, which can look like kids having unusual severe and sudden emotional changes.

7. Social Withdrawal

Heavy metals are linked to adverse behavioral effects. This may appear as excessive shyness or inability to socialize.

8. Language Delays

Lead and arsenic exposure are linked to developmental delays, such as delayed speech or difficulty learning in young kids.

9. Stomach Problems

Cadmium, arsenic, chromium, and lead are all linked to gut barrier dysfunction, causing stomach issues.
